

FAST CLIP

After firing, the Fiat ejected its spent shells from the rear of a sliding breechblock before automatically recocking. This allowed a speedy firing rate of up to 20 rounds per minute.

WEAR AND TEAR

The Fiat's barrel liner wore out after only about 500 rounds, making on-field replacements necessary. The Wehrmacht experimented with various four- and three-piece liner styles over the war years to facilitate the process.

CLEAN SWEEP

A crewman controlled the gun's horizontal traverse via the two-speed front handwheel. At the high-speed setting, the gun could make a full 360-degree sweep to shoot in any direction with 200 turns of the wheel.

HIGH AND MIGHTY

The rear handwheel adjusted the gun's elevation. There were two speeds, one for rapid movement and a slower one for precision aiming. At the higher speed, a crewman could raise the gun to a nearly vertical 85-degree elevation with 42.5 wheel rotations.

ON THE LEVEL

At the foot of each metal outrigger were leveling jacks, which screwed up or down to help the 15,000-pound gun maintain a level firing platform on uneven terrain.

Westermann, 2001 Air raid sirens wail searchlight beams flash across the sky and the night is aflame with tracer fire and aerial explosions as Allied bombers and German anti aircraft units duel in the thundering darkness Such cinematic scenes played out with increasing frequency as World War II ground to a close were more than mere stock material for movie melodramas As Edward Westermann reveals they point to a key but largely unappreciated aspect of the German war effort that has yet to get its full due Long the neglected stepchild in studies of World War II air campaigns German flak or anti aircraft units have been frequently dismissed by American British and German historians and by veterans of the European air war as ineffective weapons that wasted valuable materiel and personnel resources desperately needed elsewhere by the Third Reich Westermann emphatically disagrees with that view and makes a convincing case for the significant contributions made by the entire range of German anti aircraft defenses During the Allied air campaigns against the Third Reich well over a million tons of bombs were dropped upon the German homeland killing nearly 300 000 civilians wounding another 780 000 and destroying more than 3 500 000 industrial and residential structures Not surprisingly that aerial Armageddon has inspired countless studies of both the victorious Allied bombing offensive and the ultimately doomed Luftwaffe defense of its own skies By contrast flak units have virtually been ignored despite the fact that they employed more than a million men and women were responsible for more than half of all Allied aircraft losses forced Allied bombers to fly far above high accuracy altitudes and thus allowed Germany to hold out far longer than it might have otherwise Westermann s definitive study sheds new light on every facet of the development and organization of this vital defense arm includi Forthcoming Books Rose Army, 1992 Air Warfare and Air Base Air Defense, 1914-1973 John F.
