Abstract

Gifted children with disabilities, or twice-exceptional students, differ from both gifted children and children with disabilities. Twice-exceptional students are students who show the potential for high achievement or creative productivity in one or more areas, and manifest one or more difficulties. The access to education and support that this group of children needs differs significantly from the approach and support that others need. This paper presents the results of research related to the characteristics, recognition and support for gifted students with learning disabilities, ADHD, and autism spectrum disorder.

Key words: giftedness; gifted students with disabilities; disabilities.

The term "twice exceptional" first appeared in the works of Whitmore (1980, according to McCallum et al., 2013) and Maker (Udall & Maker, 1983, according to McCallum et al., 2013), and it referred to persons who are gifted but have certain difficulties at the same time. The National Commission on Twice-exceptional Students in the US provides the following definition (Reis et.al., 2014, p. 7): "Twice-exceptional students are those students who show the potential for high achievement or creative productivity in one or more areas such as mathematics, science, technology, social sciences, art, or other areas of human productivity, and who manifest one or more difficulties such as
