Excerpt from A Grandmother's Recollections: In the meantime, like all selfish persons, I considered what demeanor I should assume in order to impress my grandmother with a conviction of my own consequence. Of course, dignified and unbending I would be; but what if she chose to consider me a child and treat me accordingly? The idea was agonizing to my feelings, but then I proudly surveyed my five feet two inches of height and wondered how I could have thought of such a thing. Still, I had sense enough to know that such a supposition would never have entered my head had there not been sufficient grounds for it, and with no small trepidation, I prepared for my first appearance.
