

Rebuilt to stand to the Aegean Islands coastline, Zakythos also boasts some of the most spectacular natural scenery in the Aegean region and is well worth a visit.

eastern hills of Zakythos will support luxuriant vegetation. The south and east coasts shelter excellent beaches, some almost undeveloped, others home to rampant and unwelcome tourism. The once-elegant harbour town of Zakythos (Z) was rebuilt after the 1912 earthquake in the same style, and though not quite cosmopolitan Venetian, the atmosphere is still pleasant. At the southern end of the harbour is the church of Agios Simeonas (Styly Stavros, S-Stavros), the island's patron saint, rebuilt after an earthquake in 1892 and again in 1948. It has a very elegant interior with lots of gold and superb colourful murals.

At the harbour's northern end is Platia Salomonis, surrounding which are the town's other main attractions: the church of Agios Nikolaos (Sto Mikhael (St Michael)), the huge Byzantine Museum (Mon & Wed-Sat 8.30am-3.30pm) with its glorious 15th- and 16th-century paintings, mosaic frescoes, relief work and icons, glass, located behind St Platia Marina, the Museum of Eminent Zakythians (Styly Tymi-Zymi), chiefly dedicated to the poets Dionysios Solomos and Andreas Kalvos. Also of note is the Venetian fort of Bethaki (Styly Tymi-Zymi) with a very attractive pine-filled interior and wonderful views.

At the southeastern tip of the island is the beautiful Vasiliki Peninsula, location of some of the better beaches on the island. The best of these is Serakas on its eastern side, however; the beaches on Lagada Bay are some of the last few nesting sites of the Mediterranean loggerhead turtle. As the majority of visitors to the island are flown into the beach and resort resort of Lagada, there is an agglomeration of hotels, restaurants and bars, fast-food joints and clubs along this coast, severely endangering the survival of the turtles. In response, the National Marine Park of Zakythos has been set up, encompassing the whole gulf between capes Serakas to Kari. All affected beaches have wardens to protect the nests, dark-to-dark curfews, and restrictions on boating and land access.

The broad central plain is the most fertile region in the islands and is given over to intensive agriculture. In the village of Makridaki to the west is the pilgrimage church of Agios Marinos (St Mark's spring), with its ornate gilded Baroque exterior. Closer to the east coast are the popular, if slightly tacky resorts of Tafel and Alkivi.

The mountainous west coast is much wilder, and sees far fewer tourists. From the cliffs of Kari (K) on the south-west peninsula, there are incomparable views of the sea. A string of pretty hill villages runs along the western side of the mountains. The most attractive is Lafra, one of the highest settlements on the island, and like its neighbour's undamaged by the 1912 tremor. From Kitonakia, the road runs north past Kamdi where a huge cross on a headland commemorates a wartime massacre. Before Kamdi, down by the sea is a beautifully situated town of Limonakia where you can catch all the ferries. Further north, past the monasteries of Anastasiotis and Agios Georgios (Sts Erenikos), is perhaps the island's most scenic tourist sight: the shipwreck at Neritzi Bay (N), surrounded by towering white cliffs. Further on to the mountain village of Volimes, noted for its fertility and fertility. At the very northern tip of the island (Cape Stavros) are the Blue Caves (B), but on the clear water here reflects an iridescent blue on the east walls (excursions run from the small port of Agios Nikolaos and from Alkivi).

KYTHIRA

The island of Kythira sees at least one ferry boat daily from Athens and/or Nafplio, plus occasional sailings from Patris and Korinthi (Kissimos (Kissos)). Essentially a bleak plateau slashed by well-watered ravines, the island forms part of a narrow land bridge between the Peloponnese and Crete. It shares a history of Venetian and British rule like the other Ionian Isles to which it theoretically belongs, although it is now lumped administratively with the Aegean Islands under Patris. Architecturally, it's a hybrid of Cycladic and Venetian styles with an Australian accent, courtesy of immigrants from the 40,000 odd locals who thrived down under during the 1930s.

The island does not put itself out for visitors: accommodation is expensive and oversubscribed, the season short, and good beaches thin on the ground. Yet Kythira has become fairly popular thanks to regular flights from Athens. Kythira Town is also one of the finest island capitals of the Aegean, with medieval mansions and Venetian fortifications. Far below, Kapsali is the yacht berth, though there are better beaches on the east coast, as far as the fishing anchorage of Ardimenes. More resorts are to be found there and at Venetian Kato Miro, just above Agio Sofia cove, the principal west-coast attraction. In the northeast, the renaissance ghost village of Poleoskifra was the capital from 1268 until 1527, when it fell to the great-great test.

The National Marine Park of Zakythos was set up to protect nesting turtles.
