

GST 103: Philosophy, Logic and Human Existence

Peter University Achina/Onneh

First Semester 2024/2025 Session

Lecturer: Rev. Fr Dr Modestus Anyaegbu

Introduction

Philosophy is innate in man and man cannot be fully man if he is not described as rational. Making use of this essential quality of man—rationality, is the business of philosophy. Because man is rational, philosophy helps him acquire the “ability to analyse theories or points of views carefully, to assess arguments critically, to make useful and enlightening connections, and to bring some systematic order to our reflections on deep and important issues.”<sup>1</sup>

Philosophy encourages independent, creative and original thinking, and makes use of philosophical methodologies such as analysis, explication, distinction and thought experiment. It will help you to develop strong intellectual muscles which will enable you weigh others’ ideas, analyse and criticise them while articulating and defending your own ideas. This ability serves you well in other disciplines and careers you may choose to pursue in the future.

The aim of this course is to introduce the beginner in a balanced way, to a range of important problems with which philosophy deals and the intellectual tools with which to address those problems. The student is exposed to a battery of philosophical concepts, distinctions and theories that can be expressed by means of those concepts; moreover, the student is expected to be furnished with the wherewithal to address philosophical problems of everyday life and living. In addition to that, the student becomes acquainted with an arsenal of essential terms, distinctions, categories, expressions, and critical questions for encountering problems in other disciplines and in daily living. One of the inevitable philosophical tools and method that will accompany the student in his daily intellectual journey is the tool of Logic. Logic is central to a proper grasp of the ongoing debate about major philosophical problems. A philosopher should be able to employ basic logical methods, “as a matter of first instinct and intellectual habit,” to unravel philosophical issues involving intricate reasoning.

1. Scope of Philosophy—Notions, Meanings:

Philosophy is from the Greek word “philosophia” which reduced to its etymology gives us “philos” meaning “love” (the proper word is ‘philia’) and “Sophia” broadly meaning “wisdom.” Philosophia then literally means “love of wisdom.” Sophia had a much broader meaning and application than the ordinary English “wisdom.” Wisdom
