Cultural Talk

Know your Audience ▶ 40

Different cultures have different expectations of presentations. In some cultures, a conclusion or suggestion is given at the beginning, whereas in others, the audience generally receives background information and data first. In Asian cultures, letting the listeners “read between the lines” is highly valued, but in Western cultures, presenters are expected to get to the point. Other factors like timing, body language, and the degree of audience involvement should also be considered. After all, something that’s appreciated in one culture could easily be frowned upon in others. Knowing the culture of the people in your audience could be the difference between a good presentation and a great one.
