Enhancing Health Among Drug Users In Prison:

Enhancing Health Among Drug Users in Prison Anne H. Berman, 2004 This dissertation in psychology looks at ways of enhancing the health of drug users in prison. A new screening instrument for drug use disorders is presented and separate prison studies evaluate auricular acupuncture as well as cognitive behavioral treatment. An approach to treatment of inmates with so-called dual diagnosis drug use and psychiatric disorders is also explored in a pilot study of long-term auricular acupuncture. The empirical results are discussed within the framework of recent findings on offender rehabilitation and treatment for drug use. Based on perspectives of risk management, good lives, and existential psychology, a new model for enhancing health among drug users in prison is proposed. Contents include: Enhancing health for drug users in prison; theoretical issues; Offender rehabilitation; Offenders who use drugs; Methodological issues in prison research; Enhancing health for drug users in prison; practical aspects studied; Study I: How do we know an inmate uses drugs; Study II: Can we offer any low-threshold treatment to drug users in prison; Study III: Do prison inmates 60% drug users change following structured psychological treatment; Study IV: How do we help inmates with special needs; A Health enhancement model for approaching drug users in prison; Conclusions; References.

Drug Use in Prisoners Stuart Kinner, Daniel Rich, 2018 This edited volume provides the first ever comprehensive international and multi-disciplinary review of the evidence regarding substance use and harms in people who cycle through prisons and jails. Grounded in solid evidence and a human rights framework, the text provides a roadmap for evidence-based reform.

Strengths-Based Approaches to Crime and Substance Use David Best, Charlotte Colman, 2019-09-30 Although there is a strong and growing literature in the two areas of desistance and addiction recovery, they have developed along parallel pathways with little systematic assessment of the empirical evidence about the co-occurrence of the relationship or how one area can learn from the other. This book aims to fill that gap by bringing together emerging literature on the relationship between offending and substance use. Instead of focusing on the active period of its onset and persistence, this book examines the mechanisms that support desistance, addiction recovery, and the common themes of reintegration and rehabilitation. With contributions from a wide range of international experts in the fields of desistance and addiction recovery, the book focuses on a strengths-based, relational, and community-focused approach to long-term change in offending and drug-using populations, as well as the shared barriers to effective reintegration for both. This book will be highly informative for a wide audience, from academics and students interested in studying desistance and recovery to those working in addiction services and the criminal justice system, as well as policy makers and the people undertaking their own journeys to desistance and recovery.

Health in Prisons A. Gatherer, World Health Organization. Regional Office for Europe, 2007 Based on the experience of many countries in the WHO European Region and the advice of experts, this guide outlines some of the steps prison systems should take to reduce the public health risks from compulsory detention in often unhealthy situations, to care for prisoners in need, and to promote the health of prisoners and prison staff.

This requires that everyone working in prisons understand how imprisonment affects health what prisoners health needs are and how evidence based health services can be provided for everyone needing treatment care and prevention in prison Other essential elements are being aware of and accepting internationally recommended standards for prison health providing professional care with the same adherence to professional ethics as in other health services and while seeing individual needs as the central feature of the care provided promoting a whole prison approach to care and promoting the health and well being of people in custody
