

ENGINEERING REPORT WRITING

As a practicing engineer, you will need to write reports, proposals, scientific papers, and electronic messages. Writing is perhaps the most important way in which you will convey your ideas to managers, other engineers, and customers. Your communication skills will therefore determine how successful you are as an engineer, perhaps even more so than your technical expertise!

This booklet describes briefly how to write an effective engineering report. As you read this booklet, keep in mind that there is always more than one way to convey the same idea. In many situations, there is not necessarily a "right way" and a "wrong way."

REPORT ORGANIZATION.

Good report organization should promote readability and reflect the scientific method of attack, which proceeds with objective, method, results, and conclusions. It is logical to report a project in the sequence in which it is done, and many engineering reports are organized on this basis. Two improvements to the logical sequence are the addition of an abstract or executive summary and the insertion of headlines. These two features facilitate "scanning" of the report. Thus, a busy executive or engineer may quickly assess the major findings and conclusions of the report, and then easily find further details as required.

In writing a full-length engineering report, you should start with a report outline, then proceed to a rough draft. The outline defines the organization of the report, and the rough draft serves to avoid omissions. Once the content is established, the rough draft is refined for clarity and conciseness. After proofreading and correction of minor mistakes, the finished product is produced. This entire writing process is most easily done using a word processor. "Spell checkers" are particularly useful in removing spelling or typographical mistakes.

The outline for a general full-length engineering report contains the following items:

1. Title
2. Summary or Abstract (Executive Summary)
3. Introduction
4. Theory and Analysis
