

The Ethical Perspectives of the Eastern Christian Churches

Christian ethics (moral theology) is a particular form of systematic theology which focuses on the practical life of faith. On the other hand, moral philosophy, or philosophical ethics reflect the nature of moral life and what constitutes right and wrong behaviour, without any reference whatsoever to God's revelation and to Christian beliefs. As a separate discipline and area of theological study, Christian ethics is a late development in Christian history. However, the subject matter of Christian ethics is found in the original sources of Christian life and faith. There are different kinds of ethical approaches in Christian tradition, such as Jewish, Protestant, Anglican, Eastern Christian, and Catholic. Although there are not many writings in Eastern Ethics, the ethical outlook of the east is relevant today. According to the Russian moralist S. Tyszkiewicz, "the West has seen many books, collections, and articles on philosophy, dogmatic theology, monastic spirituality, mysticism, iconography and liturgical life of our separated Eastern brethren, but almost nothing has been written about their moral teachings. Even though literature in the East is comparatively very limited, today, there is renewed interest in ethical issues."<sup>1</sup> Moreover, many are not aware of the richness of the eastern ethical outlook. The main purpose of this chapter is to introduce the ethical perspectives of the Eastern Churches.

1. Eastern Christian Ethics

The development of theology within the Eastern and the Western churches is different. Eastern Christian theologians (John Meyendorff, Y. Congar, Hans Urs von Balthasar, Mathew Vellanickal, and Xavier Koodapuzha) depict the difference in Eastern and Western theology.<sup>2</sup> This difference is evident in their ethical approaches too. The foundation of Eastern Ethics is different from those of the other Confessions.<sup>3</sup>

Eastern Churches have a deep sense of history, in continuity with the early Church, and see themselves as fully sharing and expressing the early church's doctrinal teachings.
