

An anatomical illustration of a human heart, rendered in a classic engraved style. The heart is shown from a slightly elevated, anterior perspective. It features several major vessels: the aorta arching over the top, the pulmonary artery and pulmonary veins below it, and the superior and inferior vena cava entering the right atrium. The illustration is detailed, showing the texture of the heart muscle and the branching of the vessels. A central horizontal band, which serves as a background for the title, is overlaid on the middle of the heart. The numbers 1, 2, 3, and 4 are placed at various points on the heart's surface, likely corresponding to anatomical landmarks. The entire illustration is set against a solid, deep red background.
