

FREUD'S ICEBERG MODEL

Freud's psychoanalytic theory divides the personality into three parts: the ID, ego, and superego. A common analogy to explain this is the iceberg model.

EGO

The Conscious

Role: The ego is the rational, conscious part of personality that mediates between the demands of reality, the unconscious, and the moral standards of the superego.

Example: The ego would be the part of the mind that decides if you should go to work on a day when you really don't want to.

SUPEREGO

The Preconscious

Role: The superego is the moral component of personality that enforces the standards of the ego and punishes the ego for failing to meet these standards.

Example: The superego would be the part of the mind that tells you that you should go to work on a day when you really don't want to.

ID

The Unconscious

Role: The ID is the unconscious, instinctual part of personality that seeks immediate gratification of its needs and desires.

Example: The ID would be the part of the mind that wants you to go to work on a day when you really don't want to.
