Violence and aggression among patients suffering from mental health problems undoubtedly pose a challenge to healthcare professionals, families and carers. Aggressive behaviours affect all aspects of clinical care. The goal of professionals is to ensure safety while effectively managing behavioural emergencies. 'Rapid tranquillisation' implies prescribing pharmacological agents to manage these behaviours. This article highlights changing prescription trends. Appraisal of global guidelines suggests that factors other than scientific evidence dictate their evolution. High-quality randomised controlled trials are needed to develop a global guideline.

The management of violence and aggression

Violence and aggression among patients suffering from mental health problems undoubtedly pose a challenge to healthcare professionals. Families and carers find it difficult to cope and often are victims of the aggression. In-patient admission units may present a volatile environment where the surroundings can trigger or amplify such behaviours. The goal of healthcare professionals is to ensure safety while effectively managing behavioural emergencies.

Psychosis, concomitant physical illness and substance misuse or personality traits are frequently cited as aetiological factors leading to violence or aggression. In about 10% of these patients this may further escalate, leading to assaultive behaviour. Aggressive behaviours affect all aspects of clinical care. Apart from physical and psychological consequences, violent behaviour has considerable financial implications in terms of staff injuries and absenteeism (Hunter & Carmel, 1992). A press release (National Health Service, 2005) stated that there were 43,504 incidents of physical assaults against National Health Service staff working in mental health settings in 2004/05 across England.

Over the years, various interventions have been tried to manage violence and aggressive presentations. Blood-letting gained popularity after Paracelsus stated, 'Retention of toxic materials in the blood can lead to insanity'. Therapeutic blood-letting was a panacea in ancient Egypt and Western cultures up to the late 1800s. Ememas and purgatives followed suit as an extension of this theory. Fasting and prayer were also used. Subsequently, the therapeutic effects of hypnotics were discovered and somnifacients were advocated.

More recently, guidelines advocate various non-pharmacological interventions, such as de-escalation, before medications are used. They also recommend a holistic assessment replete with all relevant physical and laboratory investigations before the institution of pharmacotherapy (Expert Consensus Panel, 2005).

Rapid tranquillisation

It can sometimes be impossible to conduct a thorough physical examination of a violent patient. To ensure the safety of everyone involved, rapid tranquillisation of aggressive or violent patients may be unavoidable in these situations. Tranquillisation means calming without sedation. It is the use of psychotropic medication to control agitated, threatening or destructive psychotic behaviour, and is defined by the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence (NICE) as:

the use of medication to calmly/quietly sedate the service user, reduce the risk to self and/or others and achieve an optimal reduction in agitation and aggression, thereby allowing a thorough psychiatric evaluation to take place, and allowing comprehension and response to spoken messages throughout the intervention. (NICE, 2005)

It is used when appropriate psychological and behavioural approaches have failed to de-escalate disturbed behaviour and is therefore essentially a last resort.

Historically, two strategies have been used for rapid tranquillisation:

- high-potency antipsychotic drugs, with an anxiolytic (benzodiazepine) or other drug for sedation
- low-potency antipsychotic drugs with both sedative and antipsychotic effects.

The procedure involves administering low doses of antipsychotic medication every 30–60 minutes with the specific goal of decreasing violence. A concurrent sedative medication often has the advantage of allowing a lower dose of antipsychotic, and therefore is associated with a decreased incidence of extrapyramidal side-effects. A lack of consensus among psychiatrists on the best medications to use for rapid tranquillisation highlights the need to have standardised guidelines which would enable some degree of uniformity in practice, although they would still remain only a guide and use would have to be tailored to individual patient needs, circumstances and available resources.

Interest has been rekindled in the topic by the inquiries into the deaths of patients Orville
